Old-Time Racists And Bigots Are Behind Neo-Nazi Movement, Use Old Slogans, Study Finds

Behind the recent neo-Fascist and neo-Nazi movements stand old-time racists and bigots who hailed Hitler and Mussolini; the new movements mouth the same slogans, wear uniforms and emblems as thirty or forty years ago. That is the conclusion of Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, director of the World Jewish Congress Institute of Jewish Affairs in New York, who has recently completed a study on the ideologies and attitudes of the neo-Nazi and anti-Semitic movements.

Dr. Robinson states that the neo-Nazi and neo-Fascist movements of today are not a new post-war phenomenon, but a continuation of the totalitarian movements which existed before the defeat of Hitler and Mussolini. Many of the leaders of extreme rightist groups in Germany and elsewhere were active in the Nazi and Fascist movements long before 1945.

"The spiritual continuity of the anti-Semitic groups," Dr. Robinson states, "is the result of personal continuity." He cites as examples outside Germany the following old-time Nazis as still active and playing a considerable role in the new movements: Mosley in Britain; Per Engdahl in Sweden; Guy Amaudrux in Switzerland; Maurice Bardèche in France; Almiranti in Italy; Rockwell in the U.S.A.

There are many more, and Robinson claims that the Nazis and Fascists who, after the collapse of the Third Reich, fled to various countries, continued their activity there on strictly the same lines and were the bearers of continuity even on foreign soil. These old-time Nazis, the W.J.C. research expert states, are the leaders of the movements, the "prophets" who mold the ideology and policies of the movements.

"Whenever new organizations are created," Dr. Robinson reports, "as, for instance, the Tacuara or the Guardia in Argentina, or the National Socialists in the U.S.A. or Great Britain, they are influenced by old-timers and do not create their own ideology, but take over the pre-war Nazi and Fascist tenets. In other instances, the members of new organizations had previously belonged to other Fascist groups. This is the case, for instance, with the British National Labor Party, the White Defense League, and the Northern League, whose members, with few exceptions, had belonged to Mosley's Union Movement or the Empire Loyalists, and left them because they were not radical enough."

The trend is to identify with the past by using the same names, National Socialist, Nazi, Fascist; by displaying admiration for Hitler, Mussolini, and lesser Nazis; by the use of Nazi and Fascist salutes; the wearing of the emblems of the Hitler Youth, or the SS; or Nazi and Fascist uniforms, swastikas, and other insignia.

But what Dr. Robinson calls the "phenomenon of continuity" is related not only to the physical survival of considerable numbers of old-time Nazis and Fascists, but also to several psychological characteristics of the members of recent movements which are identical with those of the older generation, for instance: irrationality; the belief in firm authority; lack of moral and humanitarian considerations.

Closely related to the Nazi movements of yesteryear, the new groupings follow the old pattern of camouflaging their policies with slogans that conceal the true facts. They mouth such words as "culture will vanish if the race is not defended," "marriages between Europeans and non-Europeans must be regulated", which is in substance a repetition of the Nuremberg racial laws; the demand for a program "to prohibit the immigration of non-Europeans and, if possible, to send them progressively and in a humanitarian way out of our country", which calls for segregation and deportations.

To bear out his contention that there is really nothing new about the new Nazi and Fascist movements, Dr. Robinson states:

"Mosley now claims that he is not and never was an anti-Semite, but in 1936 he claimed: 'Up to three years ago anti-Semitism was unknown as a strong force in Britain. Today, in any audience in Britain, the strongest passion that can be aroused is the passion against the corruption of Jewish power.' Even now his statement about Jews is only a pious expression. As recently as October, 1962, a truck-load of his adherents touring the East End of London, shouted 'Down with the Jews.' "

Israel Rabbi, Colonel In Paratroops, Urges New Sanhedrin

The re-establishment of a Sanhedrin (supreme religious body) to interpret and resolve issues of Jewish religious life in a scientific age has been called for by Rabbi Shlomo Goren, chief religious leader of Israel's armed forces. The last Sanhedrin existed just prior to the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem by Roman forces in A.D. 70, says the New York Times. The 71-man Sanhedrin, including a chief justice, enacted decrees of religious observances and interpreted Jewish law.

In an interview at the offices of the Religious Zionists of America, at 80 Fifth Avenue, New York, Rabbi Goren cited the "urgent need" to reconvene such a council.

Rabbi Goren said that the Sanhedrin would "raise immeasurably the prestige, stature, and dignity of Orthodox Jewry" the world over and would make the "Talmudic and Biblical codes an accepted part of the behavioral patterns of Jews in their multifarious activities."

The 45-year-old rabbi said that the mass destruction of centers of Jewish learning and education during the Hitler period had resulted in a "dearth of learned scholars, rabbis, and teachers who could help in the formation of such a paramount council of Jewish law."

In this connection, Rabbi Goren pleaded for an intensive training of "gifted young Jewish men" in America and Israel who could assume the leadership in the operation of a Sanhedrin. He said that the council should again be located in Israel.

Rabbi Goren held that the Sanhedrin was "sure to fill the vacuum in world Jewish life because of the present lack of an effective rabbinic authority which could issue binding orders and rulings on difficult religious matters."

He expressed the hope that religious leaders of Conservative and Reform Judaism in the U.S. would support the rulings of the Sanhedrin.

Rabbi Goren, who is a colonel in the paratroops, is known in Israel as a Talmudic scholar and colorful personality. During the Sinai

Study Shows Ten Nations Have Legal Curbs On Racial Incitement

According to a study just completed by the World Jewish Congress, Austria, Denmark, Federal German Republic, Greece, India, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland have enacted legislation to curb racial incitement. In a preface to the study, the Congress expresses the belief that "no democratic society need hesitate to curb incitement to racial hatred by legal means. Indeed, it would appear to be its duty to do so, not only for the protection of the racial minorities but in the interest of democracy as a whole."

Some of the laws, particularly in Austria, Germany, and Norway, were supplemented as a result of the swastika-smearing outbreak in 1959-1960. Austria, which outlaws the Nazi Party and all its units and affiliated bodies, decided to strengthen its laws by adding a ban on any Nazi or Fascist insignia or badge. Germany followed Austria's lead and enacted legislation prohibiting the public use of the Nazi insignia. India's penal code provides punishment for anyone promoting enmity between different groups on grounds of religion, race, or language.

The World Jewish Congress survey, carried out by the British Section, notes that there are still "many who express doubt as to whether incitement (to racial hatred) can or should be curbed by legislative enactment." Such doubts, the World Jewish Congress states, stem from two main contentions: That the eradication of racial hatred can be achieved only by education and not by legislation; that legislation would infringe on the cherished right of freedom of expression.

The first argument "rightly points to the duty of educators in

U.S. Clergymen Decry Soviet Repression Of Jews, Call For End

Forty-six Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Jewish clergymen and educators urged the Soviet Government in a cablegram "to lift its official policy of oppression against its Jewish citizens."

The message, sponsored by the religious and educational leaders as well as the American-Jewish Committee, a human-relations agency, says the New York Times, was delivered to the Soviet Embassy in Washington for transmission to Premier Khrushchev.

The appeal appeared as an advertisement in four newspapers, The New York Times, The Washington Post and Times-Herald, The Jersey Journal, and The Providence Bulletin-Journal.

The message protested that the almost 3,000,000 Jews in the Soviet Union were "denied minimal rights conceded to adherents of other creeds."

"Hard pressed as they are by blanket restraints," the message added, "none of the other major religions of the Soviet people, neither the Orthodox, Armenian, Catholic, or Protestant churches, neither Buddhism nor Islam, have been subjected to the extraordinary disabilities inflicted on Judaism and its followers."

The protest listed the following repressive measures against Soviet Jews:

"Legally constituted Jewish congregations are isolated from one another. They are forbidden to organize a central body. They are allowed no contact with Jewish religious groups in other countries. Their leaders are singled out for abuse."

Since June, 1961, the message continued, the presidents of synagogues in six Soviet cities "have been arbitrarily removed from office; Jewish communal leaders in Leningrad and Moscow have been sentenced to prison for the alleged crime of meeting with foreign visitors to their synagogues."

The cablegram also protested that for "more than a generation,

Leader In Argentine Appointed To W.J.C.

Dr. Natan Lerner, of Buenos Aires, was appointed an officer of the International Affairs Department at the World Jewish Congress in New York, Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, head of the department, announced. Dr. Lerner, who is a member of the Buenos Aires Bar and Assistant Professor in Public International Law at the University of Buenos Aires, will take charge of the Latin American desk at the Congress, and act as deputy at the United Nations and the Organization of American States.

Dr. Lerner has published a number of works on human rights and the protection of minorities, and translations into Spanish from English, Hebrew, and Yiddish of books dealing with legal, political, and cultural subjects. He is a member of the executive of the World Jewish Congress and a vice-president of DAIA (Delegacion de Asociaciones Israelitas Argentinas), the central representative body of Argentine Jewry, and a leader in Latin American Zionist and Jewish cultural organizations. He was legal advisor to the Israel Embassy in Buenos Aires.

Dr. Perlzweig said that it marked an important development in the structure and activity of the Congress. Argentine Jewry now numbers nearly half a million souls, and no action affecting its interests should be taken on the international scene without prior consultation with its leadership. The appointment of a leader of Argentinian Jewry to the staff of the Congress will not only facilitate consultations but also enable the Congress to undertake expanded responsibilities in relation to Latin American Jewry as a whole, particularly in connection with inter-governmental institutions in the area. The Congress has affiliated communities in all these countries.

Artists Of Eight Lands Worked In Negev To Adorn Crater

Deep in the Negev eleven sculptors have sought to humanize in stone an expanse of desert that is breathtaking in its primitive grandeur. The works, which would be immense in studio or museum, are dwarfed by their present natural setting.

The non-figurative sculptures are scattered like monumental lumps of sugar for a mile or so along the rim of the Makhtesh Ramon, the 1,000-foot-deep crater that stretches, 10 miles wide and 35 miles long, across the Biblical wilderness of Zin, says the New York Times. The sculptures are results of Israel's International Symposium of Sculptors on outdoor form and space relationships.

Besides Israel, seven other countries — Belgium, Cuba, the United States, Japan, Yugoslavia, Switzerland, and Austria — were represented in this year's symposium.

The sculptors were housed at Mitzpe Ramon in quarters that will now be used for new settlers in this cooperative settlement. It seeks to set up a community based on small industry in one of the most desolate, although starkly beautiful, parts of the Negev desert.

Mitzpe Ramon is perched on the crater rim. The road south from Beersheba to Elath on the Gulf of Aqaba passes between the settlement and the sculptures, before it swings down into the great Ramon depression.

Miss Pat Diska, an American who has lived and worked in Paris since 1947, spoke for the symposium group when she said she was overwhelmed at her first sight of the setting in which she was to work. The main problem was the light. "Here you have a harsh and brutal light which kills form, and you have to try to overcome it", Miss Diska said.

Most of the sculptors worked in limestone. But Miss Diska chose a 10-ton block of granite; the Belgian sculptor, Jacques Moeschal, used cement; and the Swiss artist, Josef Wyss, used basalt.

Mr. Moeschal's work rears up like a mammoth keyhole that is split in two. It represents construction rising from the barren soil, with the circular aperture at the top symbolising eternity. The work of Dov Feigin, of Israel, seemed to at least one viewer to symbolize a desert plant, perhaps a cactus. An Israeli critic said of Miss Diska's block of granite, with its pronounced but minimal surface cutting, that it looked as though it had "hardly got under way".

If the visitors were baffled by the sculpture, so were the residents of Mitzpe Ramon. Their most frequent question, as they walked among the great slabs and blocks of stone, was "what do they represent?"

It apparently was the intention of the symposium's sponsors that the sculptures should relieve the monotonous landscape along much of the Negev highway. If that was so, almost any spot other than the spectacular Ramon depression would have been more in need of such relief, says the New York Times. The Government has announced that the 11 sculptures represent the first step toward creating a national park at the Ramon crater.

our multi-racial society to promote understanding and tolerance between people of different racial origin, but it overlooks the fact that laws, particularly criminal laws, have themselves the character and purpose of social enlightenment and often prove to be the most effective means of education."

The WJC pamphlet also challenges the second argument contending that while the sanctity of this basic freedom must be rigorously preserved and safeguarded, absolute freedom of speech or expression has never existed, and that democratic society has always found it right and necessary to put limits on this freedom when it conflicts with higher social ideals and interests.

The WJC study points out that the enactment of legislation by many countries reflects the growing acceptance by the international community of the necessity to outlaw incitement to racial hatred. The World Jewish Congress is the central representative body of Jewish communities in 64 lands.

MARRIAGES

SALOMON-FELLER

The marriage of Miss Connie-Gail Feller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Feller, of Ottawa, Ont., to Nathaniel H. Salomon, son of Mrs. Moe F. Salomon, 4360 Sherbrooke Street West, Montreal, and the late Moe F. Salomon, was solemnized in the ballroom of the Chateau Laurier, in Ottawa, on Saturday, December 29, at six o'clock, by Rabbi Simon L. Eckstein. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a long, ivory-coloured, silk gown; fashioned with a close-fitting bodice; boat-shaped neckline; and panels of lace forming a chapel train. Her bouffant, shoulder-length veil of silk tulle illusion was placed by a tiny coronet; and she carried a Bible chosen by her mother for her own wedding. Miss Donna-Lee Feller, sister of the bride, was maid of honour, wearing a long gown of blush-pink, silk brocade patterned with self-material silk roses. Her headdress was a draped, pill-box hat; and she carried a single, cerise-shaded Duchess rose. Philip M. Salomon, was his brother's best man. The ushers were: W. Ian Feller, brother of the bride; Wallace Cherun, cousin of the bride; Edgar Leibovitch, brother-in-law of the groom; Alan Kirsch, Martin Kirsch, Charles Schwartz, Dr. Harold Scherzer, Dr. Charles Solomon, Dr. Paul Rosman, cousins of the groom; and Joel Rubinovitch. White birch trees, orchids, and ferns composed the decorations. A reception was held prior to a candle-light dinner in the ballroom. Mrs. Feller, mother of the bride, wore an orchid-coloured lace gown, re-embroidered with silver lame thread; and a hat to match it. Mrs. Salomon, mother of the groom, in a pink, satin gown, had a hat of the same shade. Each had a corsage of pink orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel H. Salomon spent their wedding trip in Mexico, the bride travelling in an ensemble of champagne-coloured boucle; with natural lizard accessories.

campaign against Egypt in 1956, he parachuted with his forces to conduct religious services.

The bearded chief chaplain asserted that Israel's "spiritual renaissance is apt to leave a deep imprint on the destiny of world Jewry, and assist in linking diverse Jewish communities in a more solid association and bond", says the New York Times. While in New York, Rabbi Goren spoke on behalf of the Israel bond campaign and addressed the executive board of the Rabbinical Council of America on religious problems in Israel and the United States.

OLD-TIME RACISTS AND BIGOTS ARE BEHIND NEO-NAZI MOVEMENT

"Colin Jordan's 'British Nazi Party not only has organized a Nazi-like fighting group, 'Spearhead,' but also uses pictures of the notorious anti-Semite, Julius Streicher, and Hitler, swastika arm-bands, weed-killers with labels, 'Jew-killer', easily convertible into explosive, with instructions how to place them in a room full of Jews. Their Party Manifesto not only declared that 'Hitler showed the way' but also attacked the 'grip of Jewish domination' on Great Britain.

"In the U.S.A. the first issue of the American Nazi Party's official organ, The Stormtrooper, consisting of eighteen pages, was devoted to vilifying the Jews in word and picture. Rockwell, returning from Europe, suggested the passing of a law to enable Western Governments to 'gas Communist traitors and Zionists because there are not enough electric chairs.' The spiritual leader of the Argentinian Nazi Party, Guardia Restauradora Nacionalista, says that Jews are allies of Communists and, as Communists, they invite attack.

"In France, the (banned) Nazi Parti Nationaliste demanded the abolition of the 'hegemony of Jews.' Its organ Jeune Nation was wildly anti-Semitic. The French Fascist, Pierre Poujade, who in 1953 started an anti-tax movement and within a few years had created a Union movement numbering some 450,000 members, was as late as November, 1962, found guilty by a French court of incitement to racial hatred by publishing two anti-Semitic articles in his periodical 'Fraternité Française'. In Belgium, the Movement Social Belge (section of the European Social Movement), published L'Europe Réelle, which is openly anti-Semitic."

Jewish theological seminaries have been banned, except for a lone Yeshiva in Moscow, opened in 1956," says the New York Times. It added that the enrollment in the Yeshiva, never permitted to exceed 20, was reduced to four in April, 1962.

Among the charges in the message was one that no Jewish Bible had been printed in the Soviet Union in 40 years. The cablegram said that these conditions revived "memories of the anti-Semitic Stalin regime," which Premier Khrushchev has denounced.

Among the religious leaders, who signed the cablegram in their individual capacities, were:

Dr. John C. Bennett, dean of faculty, Union Theological Seminary; Dr. Harold E. Fey, editor, The Christian Century; Dr. Alvin Rogness, president Lutheran Theological Seminary; Archbishop Karl J. Alter, Cincinnati; the Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, C.S.C., president, University of Notre Dame; Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle, Washington, D.C.

Also, Dr. Norman Geratenfeld, rabbi, the Washington Hebrew Congregation; Dr. Nelson Glueck, president, Hebrew Union College — Jewish Institute of Religion; Rabbi Julius Mark, president, Synagogue Council of America; Archbishop Iakovos, Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of North and South America.

Although the cablegram did not mention recent arrests and imprisonment of Jewish citizens on charges of economic crimes, says the New York Times, dispatches from the Soviet Union have pointed to an increasing number of such arrests.

NO ROLL DANISH PASTRY

one-half pound butter
one-quarter cup sugar
one egg yolk
two teaspoons sugar
one teaspoon baking soda
three tablespoons chopped nuts three cups flour
one-half cup sour cream
one-half cup warm water
two packages dry yeast
six tablespoons brown sugar
lemon filling or jam

Dissolve the yeast and the two teaspoons of sugar in the one-half cup of warm water. In a bowl, mix the flour, sugar, and soda; and cut in the butter very finely. Add the egg yolk to the sour cream and stir into the flour mixture. Add the dissolved yeast. Mix and divide the dough into three parts. Wrap each part in wax paper; and refrigerate over night. Let stand at room temperature for one-half or three-quarters of an hour before using. Roll out one part at a time, to one-quarter-inch thickness. Sprinkle with two tablespoons brown sugar and one tablespoon of chopped nuts. Roll up like jelly roll and cut into one-quarter inch sections. Flatten on a greased baking sheet. Let rise until double in size. Place one teaspoon of lemon filling or jam in centre of each. Bake at 375 degrees for about twenty minutes or until golden brown. Mix one-half cup of icing sugar with two teaspoons of warm water and dribble over the hot pastry immediately after removing from oven. Repeat method with other two parts using various shapes if desired.

THE JEW IN AMERICAN SOCIETY

Bernard C. Rosen's study of the religious convictions and conduct of Jewish adolescents in Philadelphia and Elmira, N. Y., in the main confirms the findings of Polsky and Sklare regarding the failure of affiliated Jews to translate membership in a synagogue into day-by-day action. Regrettably, there is no chapter in the volume on developments in Reform Judaism where the end is now in the direction of more traditionalism.

The role the rabbi plays on the Jewish religious scene also reflects the growing acculturation of the Jewish community. In function and performance, the American rabbi bears a greater resemblance to the liberal Protestant pastor than to the old rov. He is neither the scholar-saint of the shtetl in Eastern Europe, nor the authoritative spiritual leader of post-Emancipation Western Europe.

The American rabbi, whether he be Orthodox, neo-Orthodox, Conservative, or Reform is primarily a spokesman. He is the representative of the Jewish community to the outside world, and his primary task within the community is to build his congregation and supervise its Hebrew school. The study by Jerome E. Carlin and Saul H. Mendlowitz gives a penetrating insight into one of the most significant wings of the Jewish community edifice in the country.

The essay by Solomon Sutker on the role of social clubs in Atlanta, Georgia, and the one by E. Digby Baltzell on the development of a Jewish upper-class in Philadelphia bring home the oft-overlooked fact that while the Jewish community is almost exclusively middle-class in relation to society at large, it is divided within itself on social and class lines. It is more consolidated as an ethnic group than as a socio-economic entity. According to Herbert J. Gans, this is just as much a fact in the suburbs as in the large cities.

While Jewish historical influences indirectly enter into the picture through a number of chapters relating to the various aspects of American Jewish life, the impact of Israel is hardly touched upon in the present volume. The essay on this subject by Marshall Sklare and Benjamin B. Ringer is too limited in scope and bears more on the reaction to the proclamation of the State than on the impact of its existence upon American Jewry. That impact still awaits a realistic assessment.

It would be too much to expect evenness in a work like "The Jews." We may question the wisdom of including some chapters in the book or regret the omission of others. On the whole, however, we should be grateful to Dr. Sklare for compiling between the covers of a single volume an amazing amount of information on the evolution of the largest Jewish community in the world.

THE JEW IN AMERICAN SOCIETY

BY C. BEZALEL SHERMAN

The subtitle of "The Jews," "Social Patterns of an American Group", notwithstanding, the Jews are not just another "American group." They are a peculiar group, whose development in this country, while following general patterns in many respects, represents something unique in American experience. And the uniqueness flows from the desire of the Jews to fit into the "social patterns" of the United States without losing their own group individuality — an individuality formed by an ancient culture making continuous attempts to accommodate itself in the framework of new civilizations.

There have been as many of these attempts as there were countries to which countless generations of wandering carried the Jews. Conditions varied from land to land and from period to period, but one thing has remained unchanged in the Diaspora: the minority status of the Jew. Faced with the task of adjusting himself to patterns designed by others, he has always been on the defensive in intergroup intercourse, lacking the spontaneity of a free give-and-take relationship which only real equality of status can supply.

In the ghetto, the Jew was totally excluded from the mainstream of the life of the peoples among whom he resided. In the emancipated lands, he gained access to some of the outlets of their national life but at a price higher than the one his non-Jewish compatriots had to pay. This price was in part exacted from him by a majority which itself did not live long enough in freedom; in part he paid the price himself out of a sense of insecurity which stemmed from a consciousness of inequality.

Social inequality followed the Jew in the United States, too, but here it was not the result of, and has not been accompanied by, political inequality. This is the new element that America has introduced into the civic status of the Jews. America is different, Dr. Ben Halpern points out in the chapter taken from his book, The American Jew, in that in this country we have for the first time a Jewish community that had not gone through a ghetto period and had not obtained its political equality as a result of a social upheaval.

However, Jews have not avoided paying a special price for attaining the position they now hold in the American nation, for here, too, they have had to seek accommodation to a way of life which was fashioned by others. To be sure, America has no state religion, but American society is overwhelmingly Christian; and in the final analysis it is society that molds social patterns in a democratic state.

The cumulative effect of the forty essays comprising the volume, ably edited by Dr. Marshall Sklare, is to give us an idea of what it has cost the Jewish community to adjust to American patterns and of the values it has received in return. Before weighing one against the other, one must study the available demographic and socio-economic data concerning American Jewry.

The picture that emerges after such study is of a community some five and a quarter or five and one-half million, of whom at least three-quarters are of native birth. It is an aging community, one that is rapidly losing all resemblance to an immigrant colony and is nearing complete rootedness in American soil. The figures compiled by Ben B. Seligman, on the basis of the Jewish population studies carried out during the past two decades, while lacking the accuracy of a government census, give us a fairly clear view of the demographic problems of this community.

The Jewish family is not as large as it was fifty years ago; neither is it as small as twenty-five years ago. The birth rate among Jews, although increasing still lags behind the country as a whole. The Jewish family is smaller than the average, and this raises the question whether the Jewish population will be able to augment or even maintain its numerical strength by natural growth.

While Jews are slower in reflecting the rise in this country of family size, they are faster than others with respect to social mobility. They move with the general tide economically, but at a more rapid pace than the country at large. They are therefore more middle-class in their occupational distribution than American society as a whole, which is also becoming more middle class every day. Small trade is giving way to the professions and white-collar work as the base of Jewish middle-classness.

The growing middle-classness is making itself felt in all facets of Jewish life. It is changing the intra-community groupings within the Jewish environment and affecting relations with the outside world. Jewish middle-classness is peculiar in its social implications in that social standing does not always correspond to financial position where a Jew is concerned.

In terms of the dominating prestige scales, a Jew remains a member of the middle-class even if his wealth would ordinarily confer upon him upper-class social status. A middle-class status is thus the level toward which the lower classes gravitate and from which the higher strata cannot move because of discrimination. In this sense one may indeed speak of the entire Jewish settlement in the United States as a middle-class community.

Middle-classness explains much in American Jewish life, but not nearly as much as some of the young sociologists represented in the volume, including the editor and Nathan Glazer, claim. For the discrepancy between wealth and prestige is not the only incongruity in the position of the Jew in American society. What makes this position so distinctive is precisely the fact that the Jew frequently finds himself under compulsion to detour from the road which members of other ethnic groups living in the same economic conditions traverse.

The two chapters in the book — one by Lawrence H. Fuchs, the other by Werner Cohn — dealing with the Jew in American politics attest to this fact. The authors differ regarding the motivation behind Jewish voting behavior; they are in agreement, however, in placing the Jews among the more liberal elements in the American electorate. At the ballot box, Jewish voters do not give economic matters the consideration these matters receive from non-Jews of a similar financial standing.

The Jew achieves by acculturation what it takes others to accomplish by total assimilation or ethnic dissolution. However, this acculturation is not without profound effect upon American Jewish life. It weakens old spiritual ties in proportion as it strengthens newly acquired moorings; hence, the stronger the acculturation of the American Jew, the weaker his desire to deviate from the majority way of life. This is to be observed even in religious matters — an area in which America does recognize and accept differences.

There is a marked tendency on the part of the more liberal Jewish groups to blunt the edges of religious division, and this accounts for their eagerness to promote interfaith and goodwill demonstrations in which it is Jews themselves who, for the most part, provide the audience and make all the compromises. The distance between the Jews and the general population is still great in regard to social mores (customs) and attitudes, particularly where traditional Jewish values are involved, but the trend is toward shortening the distance.

The article by Sophia M. Robison on delinquency among Jewish children and the one by Charles R. Snyder on intoxicating drinking among Jews shed considerable light on this process. Dr. Robison, analyzing the cases handled by the Juvenile Court of New York in 1962, arrives at the conclusion that the rate of delinquency among Jews (three percent of the total) is nearly ten times smaller than the proportion of Jews in the city's general population.

Although the rate is also substantially lower than it was in 1932, when Dr. Robison made her first study of delinquency in New York, it marks a radical shift in the offenses which brought the Jewish children to the Juvenile Court. The leading offense in 1930 was begging and peddling without a license; in 1962 the main offense was the wrongful appropriation of property which included burglary, robbery, stealing, and auto theft. This shift, Dr. Robison states, shows that "the Jewish child who was brought to the court in 1962 came because his behavior was more similar to that of the non-Jewish delinquent than was true two decades earlier."

In drinking, too, the same phenomenon is to be observed. The distance between Jew and non-Jew is still very great, but the tendency is to shorten it, particularly in areas where Jew and non-Jew find themselves in close social proximity, as in the armed services and on campuses. Here the Jew wants to show that he can hold his liquor with the best of them. To be sure he more often than not cuts down on his drinking after leaving the army or college, but this is offset by the increasing consumption of intoxicants among the Jewish population in general.

The rapid rise of synagogal affiliation among the Jewish youth is perhaps the most striking manifestation of the process of acculturation. In a country of joiners and belongers, membership in a congregation is almost a mandatory concomitant of middle-class respectability. But still it would be a mistake to minimise the importance of the trend toward the synagogue merely because it is not the product of a genuine religious revival.

Affiliation, whatever the motivation, strengthens Jewish group life in this country and cements its community structure. Orthodoxy provides, of course, a stouter defense against assimilation than modern religious Judaism, but the current is in the direction of the latter — especially among the youth of the third generation. The study of "Orthodoxy in Milwaukee", by Howard W. Polsky, reveals a situation which is not atypical of the one prevailing in the country as a whole.

Only 30 percent of the married sons of members of the Milwaukee Orthodox congregations retain their affiliation with these institutions; 20 percent join a Conservative synagogue; 17 percent become members of Reform temples; and 33 percent stay out of organized religion altogether. Not only is Orthodoxy losing ground to Conservatism and Reform, but the Orthodox armor is itself being pierced and offers diminishing resistance to the effects of acculturation.

Only 12 per cent of the members of Orthodox congregations, the Polsky study shows, observe the Sabbath; only 62 percent of them keep kosher homes; and no more than 34 percent stick to kashrut outside their homes. No more than two percent of the married sons of these members observe the Sabbath and kashrut outside the home, and only 19 percent keep kosher homes.

Marshall Sklare's chapter on worship among Conservative Jews discloses that there is very little connection between belonging to a Conservative synagogue and adhering to the practices to which such belonging is supposed to commit one.
